Acceptable Use Policy

Last revised: July 24, 2026

This Acceptable Use Policy is part of our Terms of Service (<https://screenzor.com/terms-of-service>). By using Screenzor, you agree not to:

- Record any person's screen, audio, or video without the consent required by the law of your location. Some jurisdictions (for example, several US states) require the consent of all parties to a recording, not just one — you are responsible for knowing and following the consent rules that apply to you.

- Use the Service to create, store, or share content that is illegal, infringes someone else's intellectual property rights, or violates someone's privacy.

- Use the Service to harass, threaten, or defame any person.
- Upload malware or attempt to disrupt, reverse-engineer, or gain unauthorized access to the Service or other users' accounts.

- Circumvent any usage limits, security measures, or access controls.
- Resell or provide the Service to third parties without our written authorization.

- Scrape, crawl, or systematically extract data from the Service outside of features we provide for that purpose.

Enforcement

Violating this policy may result in content removal, account suspension, or termination, as described in our Terms of Service (<https://screenzor.com/terms-of-service>).

Reporting a Violation

If you believe someone is violating this policy, contact us at legal@screenzor.com.

Changes to This Policy

See the notice at the end of this document for how we handle changes to this policy.
